Atlas D Missile Complex

Last night 3 of us took a 40 minute car ride out to another missile complex. This complex was huge and had a number of different weird looking things that I can't figure out for the life of me. As shown in the pictures there are 4 large shapes that are all in a very straight line and are exactly one mile from each other. The long white things are buildings and the line around the outside is roads. This base was still used by the government and had a bunch of military vehicles parked on it. All the vehicles seemed to be out of commission for a few years. The actual launch buildings and command centers were pretty well trashed. To the west of the complex there were some weird roads with some small buildings that were exactly .10 miles apart. Very odd! I will have to do some more research in to what this area was actually used for.

For those of you google earth users here a link to some placemarks that lists all the strategic air command missile complexes all over the country <http://bbs.keyhole.com/ubb/showthreaded.php/Cat/0/Number/187519/an/page/page/0/vc/1>

This site is Atlas 1 in Nebraska

This is a battery case in the basement of the command center

This was in some random garage out in a field. Sign reads "Explosive limit 1 R/V Personnell Limit 4" who knows what that was for. Lauren on left Mikey on right

This is the command center entrance, back in 1962 this would have been a classified complex.

This is the launch building as it sits today

This is the launch building as it was back in the early 60s

This is the entire complex with the missile launch center in the upper left corner

This is the launch complex, the command center is in the bottom middle and the launch buildings around it to the north.

This is a close up of one of those odd shapes. Each one placed exactly 1.0 mile from the edge of the long building to the edge of the next. All in a straight line from east to west.
